After the division of the country, Thomas had a real burden for his fellow countrymen whose lives had been totally impoverished by years of civil war.

As a constructive contribution to the rebuilding of the community there, Thomas started a micro loan scheme which is being run on a day to day basis by Sudanese leaders. The project is still developing and the signs of progress are encouraging. It is hoped that this empowerment project will be a means of securing financial independence for the members.

The needs in southern Sudan are immense and it is projects like this which are essential to bring hope to that war torn community.

Thomas and Joyce Lubari have lived in Uganda for many years. Thomas has a background in agriculture and theology. Joyce is trained in accounting and is the administrative manager of the loan scheme. They have five children and are also responsible for other children from Thomas' family. Although based in Uganda, Thomas is Sudanese and was a refugee from there.

Thomas regularly returns to Sudan and is involved in a church leadership training programme there as well as this micro loan scheme.
